

ASPIRO... CLIMBING HIGHER

Therapeutic Adventures...

Spotlight: Aspiro Admissions Director, Josh Watson

February 16, 2007

Josh Watson, LCSW

The unique vision of Aspiro convinced Josh that he needed to make a move from the Southeast all the way to the beautiful state of Utah. After spending several months learning about Aspiro's innovative approach through high-impact adventure therapy, Josh and his family decided to join the Aspiro team back in October of 2006. "After doing my research it wasn't hard for Brian Church, a former colleague of mine, and now the Director of Business Development for Aspiro, to convince me that Aspiro would be the pioneer for a new and more effective outdoor therapy model," said Watson.

Josh has a Master's Degree in Social Work and over seven years of experience working with adolescents and families in crisis. Over the past several years he has been a therapist and an admissions officer for a therapeutic boarding school. As the Director of Admissions, Josh will be working diligently with consultants and families on as-

As our one year anniversary approaches (April), we have had the opportunity to complete a thorough evaluation of almost every aspect of our program — including finances. After careful consideration, the leadership team determined to make no changes (at

New Aspiro Video Really Rocks...

Many of you have had a "sneak-peak" at our student-created video. Editing is almost completed on the short version.

Our creative, student videographer, has come through with more footage and we will soon have a lengthier, more in-depth video. This new gem will really give consultants and parents an upbeat, thorough overview of our philosophy,
